There was music from my neighbour's house during the summer nights. In his gardens men and girls came and went like moths. In the afternoon, when the water was at its highest, I watched his guests swimming or sun-bathing on the hot sand of his private beach, while his two boats cut a channel through the water of the bay. At weekends his large car which resembled a bus, carried happy guests to and from the city from early in the morning until after midnight. And on Mondays, eight servants worked hard all day, cleaning and mending and tidying up after the damage done the day before.

Every Friday five large crates of oranges and lemons arrived from a fruit shop in New York; every Monday the skins of these oranges and lemons were piled outside the back door of the house.

At least once every two weeks a large tent decorated with lights was put up in Gatsby's garden. Many cooks prepared wonderful dishes which covered the tables so that there was no space to be seen between one dish and the next. In the big hall delicious drinks were served.

By 7 o'clock a large number of musicians had arrived to play for the guests. The last swimmers were now dressing. The cars were parked from one side of the road to the other and already the house, both inside and outside, was filled with people with strange hair-styles and eccentric clothes. The air filled with talk and laughter as guests met each other for the first time.

C. Fill in the gaps in the following text with only ONE word. (10 x 1 = 10 marks)

As motorway networks improve throughout Europe, travelling long distances (1) with car is no longer the problem it was years (2) ago. Each year, huge numbers of people set off in their own itinerary on their summer (3) holiday. They believe that having their own means of transport will enable them (4) to choose their own route (5) and for their holiday. Independent travel also allows people to change their itinerary to include places that the majority (6) of tourists never get to see. However, international travel is not the same as having a day out (7) or going on a family trip to the seaside. As most Europeans tend to take their holidays at the same (8) time of year, huge traffic jams occur on the roads of Europe as people head for the (9) most popular resorts. Such congestion causes delay in getting to destinations and makes for an unhappy start to a holiday. Perhaps package holidays are (10) safer after all.
