(According to the text)

In the integrated work project approach the students choose four subjects from two or more areas of study. This is based on their preferences and talent. The right of choice is very important because they learn to be responsible and are motivated through this novel approach. The project can be the product of their own work or work with others. Assessment takes place during the activity.

(Students' views)

- promotes autonomy in learning
- use of resources apart from their textbook
- encourages students' and teacher / students' collaboration and relationships
- widens students' horizons
- improves learning skills
- promotes lifelong learning.
